Why the Olympic Pride House is standing tall for gay sport

Whether you think the Olympics are for you or not, LGBT sports and human rights come together at London 2012’s Pride House.

8 AUGUST 2012 | BY MARC NARMAN

Tomorrow (8 August), partners in London’s Olympic Pride House and other organisations will be joining in a protest against the homophobic ban by Russian authorities on a Pride House at the 2014 Winter Olympics.

The Sochi Exhibition in London is Russia’s promotional push for the winter games which will be held in the city of the same name on the Black Sea coast.

The judge who endorsed the ban on an LGBT Pride House in Sochi said that it would damage Russian morality and even endanger Russia’s future as a viable country.

So why was it important?
